Triangulating mindfulness
— pupils, staff & parents

For me, mindfulness is a way of life and I believe that if we can teach mindfulness to our children, we are teaching them a life skill, which they can use and practice throughout their life. I feel strongly that we need to offer them strategies, tool kits to help them deal with the challenges of modern life.

No one in my school had heard of mindfulness so my first step was to speak to the head teacher about the impact it had had on me and my daughter. I had done lots of research into the benefits of teaching mindfulness in schools that I also shared with him.

He agreed to fund my training to do the .b program, then later the first Paws b course.

It was the children’s experiences and testimonials of how mindfulness benefited and helped them that really supported me in continuing our school’s mindfulness journey. It is definitely the children’s experiences that swayed the SLT to continue supporting mindfulness here.

However, I felt strongly that if we were teaching mindfulness to children, we needed to also help staff to become more mindful themselves. Teaching is such a high pressured, stressful job, and so I really wanted to be able to offer a mindfulness course to staff. I did three INSET twilight sessions introducing all staff to mindfulness and gave them experiential practices.

I then offered the .b course last year to all staff, which 20 members of staff did. In March this year I trained to teach the .b foundation course and I am currently running this course with staff and separately to a group of 20 parents. We are trying to deliver mindfulness in a triangulation with children, parents and teachers here. We really feel this is the most effective way to bring mindfulness into school and our school community.

I love walking around the school hearing snippets of conversation between staff and pupils. Mindfulness and the different practices from Paws b and .b Foundations are creating a common language between staff and pupils, which is fantastic.

As a teacher I find mindfulness useful, especially for settling a class and helping them focus, though never as a form of discipline.

For me, mindfulness is a way of life and I believe that if we can teach mindfulness to our children we are teaching them a life skill, which they can use and practice throughout their life. I feel strongly that we need to offer them strategies, tool kits to help them deal with the challenges of modern life.

No one in my school had heard of mindfulness so my first step was to speak to the head teacher about the impact it had had on me and my daughter. I had done lots of research into the benefits of teaching mindfulness in schools that I also shared with him.

He agreed to fund my training to do the .b program, then later the first Paws b course.

It was the children’s experiences and testimonials of how mindfulness benefited and helped them that really supported me in continuing our school’s mindfulness journey. It is definitely the children’s experiences that swayed the SLT to continue supporting mindfulness here.

However, I felt strongly that if we were teaching mindfulness to children, we needed to also help staff to become more mindful themselves. Teaching is such a high pressured, stressful job, and so I really wanted to be able to offer a mindfulness course to staff. I did three INSET twilight sessions introducing all staff to mindfulness and gave them experiential practices.

I then offered the .b course last year to all staff, which 20 members of staff did. In March this year I trained to teach the .b foundation course and I am currently running this course with staff and separately to a group of 20 parents. We are trying to deliver mindfulness in a triangulation with children, parents and teachers here. We really feel this is the most effective way to bring mindfulness into school and our school community.

I love walking around the school hearing snippets of conversation between staff and pupils. Mindfulness and the different practices from Paws b and .b Foundations are creating a common language between staff and pupils, which is fantastic.

As a teacher I find mindfulness useful, especially for settling a class and helping them focus, though never as a form of discipline.

For me, mindfulness is a way of life and I believe that if we can teach mindfulness to our children we are teaching them a life skill, which they can use and practice throughout their life. I feel strongly that we need to offer them strategies, tool kits to help them deal with the challenges of modern life.

No one in my school had heard of mindfulness so my first step was to speak to the head teacher about the impact it had had on me and my daughter. I had done lots of research into the benefits of teaching mindfulness in schools that I also shared with him.

He agreed to fund my training to do the .b program, then later the first Paws b course.

It was the children’s experiences and testimonials of how mindfulness benefited and helped them that really supported me in continuing our school’s mindfulness journey. It is definitely the children’s experiences that swayed the SLT to continue supporting mindfulness here.

However, I felt strongly that if we were teaching mindfulness to children, we needed to also help staff to become more mindful themselves. Teaching is such a high pressured, stressful job, and so I really wanted to be able to offer a mindfulness course to staff. I did three INSET twilight sessions introducing all staff to mindfulness and gave them experiential practices.

I then offered the .b course last year to all staff, which 20 members of staff did. In March this year I trained to teach the .b foundation course and I am currently running this course with staff and separately to a group of 20 parents. We are trying to deliver mindfulness in a triangulation with children, parents and teachers here. We really feel this is the most effective way to bring mindfulness into school and our school community.

I love walking around the school hearing snippets of conversation between staff and pupils. Mindfulness and the different practices from Paws b and .b Foundations are creating a common language between staff and pupils, which is fantastic.

As a teacher I find mindfulness useful, especially for settling a class and helping them focus, though never as a form of discipline.
Other staff talk about how it has made them more aware of their thoughts, how it has helped them nourish themselves, they say that this in turn makes them better teachers, improving their lives and those around them. Seeing the journey the children go on is wonderful. At first when guiding a practice there are giggles and fidgets, there's always some kind of disengagement. By the end of the course it’s a complete transformation, the stillness and quiet never cease to amaze me.

Talking to the children about their own personal experiences of how mindfulness helps in their own day to day life is definitely then most rewarding thing. Hearing about how they use mindfulness away from the classroom or in the classroom but with no guidance is just incredible.

Our pupils talk about how mindfulness helps them in many different ways: getting to sleep, coping with the pressure of exams, dealing with relationships at home, playing sports or just helping them realize when they are feeling wobbly and how to rebalance themselves.

There have been many surprises and lots to amuse.

One mum spoke to me on the playground and told me that her nine year old daughter had been in a gymnastics competition at the weekend. The team were really nervous and one of the girls on the team began to cry with nerves. This then made some of the other girls cry. So her daughter, who had done the Paws.b program in school with me taught her whole team to do finger breathing to help calm them down. Apparently she taught the team and they all sat on the bench doing breathing. How brilliant is that?

Another time a year four girl came in with a photo of her and her friend. They had been on FaceTime together and decided to do chest belly breathing practice together. Her mum walked in to the room and had taken a picture of them when she saw what they were doing.

A year six child told me how nervous she was returning to school after the Easter holidays in her summer uniform. She said she noticed she was worrying if she was going to be the only one in a summer dress. So she went upstairs to her room and did petal breathing, she said she calmed down, realised they were just thoughts, went to school and as she walked in the playground everyone was in summer dresses. She said if she hadn’t have done petal breathing she wouldn’t have gone to school and would have told her mum she had a tummy ache.

I make sure that I keep the whole of the SLT informed of how courses are going, and how children have said they helped them. I regularly email, have meetings, and share video footage of the children practicing and talking about mindfulness. It has been beneficial to offer mindfulness courses to SLT and school staff to personally experience mindfulness and understand it more. I run regular taster workshops with parents as well so that we are continually offering mindfulness to the whole community.

This is really important. It is important that SLT view teaching mindfulness in schools as a continuous journey and is not something you can do once or twice a year and tick a box.

It takes a lot of effort and commitment to ensure that this journey continues to evolve but it is so, so valuable and worthwhile in my opinion. Once a term I deliver a twilight staff meeting which includes an update for all staff about where we are in our mindfulness journey. There is also an opportunity for staff to share their personal experience of mindfulness. These twilights keep mindfulness on the agenda and helps to give it importance at English Martyrs. Our SLT also include mindfulness on our school development plan, which demonstrates their commitment to the programme.
Mindfulness was pretty unheard of when I decided to train to teach with MiSP, so I paid for the course myself. Having personal experience of the effectiveness of mindfulness was key, helping me lay out how it could help fellow staff and students at the Gryphon to our management.

As you can imagine, some staff were reluctant to embrace mindfulness to begin with. Mindfulness isn’t for everyone, but I was able to bring some of them round by running an introduction to mindfulness as an inset for all staff, then running the first .b course with staff as well. That gave some of the staff first hand experience of the impact mindfulness can have, and gave me a chance to practise before I started to teach the students.

Those first members of staff to take the course then became ambassadors for mindfulness at the Gryphon, proactively sharing their experience with colleagues.

The other challenge I faced was making time to teach mindfulness outside class time. I found that using lunchtimes and registration times enabled me to reach a large number of students.

I really enjoy seeing the benefit the students get from learning mindfulness. One told me how he used a 7/11 to calm down before going on stage, another how he uses .b to cope when panicking in a classroom. Once a parent caught me at the end of a parents’ evening and told me the mindfulness course had transformed her daughter’s life.

Over time greater interest has developed among the senior management at the school. It helped having two deputy heads come on the staff course, and they have seen the impact on the students as more have taken the course. It is now part of our culture and next term I start a new role as Mindfulness Facilitator, working with students and staff to build resilience at The Gryphon.
Mindfulness in Schools Project (MiSP) is the UK’s leading provider of mindfulness classroom curricula.

MiSP was established in 2009 and has since offered high quality, face-to-face training to thousands of teachers. Our highly acclaimed curricula include: .b for secondary schools, Paws b for primary schools, and .b Foundations.

Our aim is to bring mindfulness to young people and those who care for them. We hope that every child and teacher in the UK has the opportunity to learn about mindfulness at school in order to help them manage difficulties and flourish.

In 2016 MiSP achieved charitable status. We are now able to help children living in areas of high deprivation to access mindfulness by offering supported places on teacher training courses. These are offered to UK schools who have above average numbers of pupils receiving Free School Meals.

MiSP advised the Mindfulness All-Party Parliamentary Group on the Mindful Nation UK Report 2015.